With the coronavirus spreading across the globe, many universities across the world have moved their courses online. While this may seem to be easier for business, math or science majors, we are all on the same boat. This rush to move online has left us scrambling for ideas, especially for performance courses. Going online can seem difficult and challenging for theatre or/and dance practitioners but it can be done.

In a rush to help, I have created this google doc with references, resources, ideas and more. But before you start, you need to think about diversity, equity and inclusion, in order to do this, it is crucial to include your students into the conversation and talk about accessibility.

In the past week, I have had wonderful and insightful conversations with my students. Before starting my online classes, I sent a survey to my students to learn about their accessibility and concerns. They raised some great questions that I was able to respond quickly. I then scheduled two check-ins with them, to see how they were, learn Zoom, and gather ideas from them about the course. I learned about their learning environments, met their pets, and even some of their parents. Not everyone was able to join, and that was ok. I learned from the survey that I will need to make certain accommodations and changes for them. Some don’t have access, others had to return to their native countries and time differences will make it hard for them to “come to class” but regardless, I will work with each and all of them to make it work. We have too. I ask that as you move forward, work with your students.

Also, please be kind and compassionate with yourself. You are doing an amazing job! This isn’t easy and I hope this document helps with the transition.

In order to navigate the document, I have added a table of contents. You can click on the links, and it will directly take you to the page. This document has grown tremendously and will keep growing, but only with your help. I have had various colleagues and friends contribute pieces, ideas, resources. If you have any ideas, please feel free to send them to me and I will add them.

ADVICE TO REMEMBER

STUDENTS AND ACCESSIBILITY

Here are some suggestions on how to do this:

Create a google form where you can ask your students about their tech status and needs. It is imperative that you do not assume all students have computers and access to wifi. If students are sent home, some might not have the access we are requesting of them. Also, do not assume that if students have phones, they are able to conduct all the work on their phone alone. Some students have phones, but they may not have unlimited data access.

Ask:
- Do you have a computer/or a tablet at home?
- Do you have access to wifi? Smart phone?
- Do you have a quiet room where you can work?
- (For theatre- you might want to ask, do you have a room where you can move around?)
- Do their electronics support the programs we are asking them to use?

My colleague Professor Rebecca Avalos created the following survey for her students:

Digital Access Equity Survey

1. Do you have digital access for everyday use?
2. What platforms do you use to access our Brightspace page?
3. Is Wifi everyday accessibility realistic for you?
4. Do you have daily access to a webcam or microphone?
5. Are you familiar with group chat/lecture services like Zoom or Echo?
6. Do you prefer individual questionnaires or collective online discussions, or both?
7. Do you prefer weekly or bi-weekly Professor-Student check-ins?
8. Do you prefer collective check-ins or individual/private check-ins with your professor?
9. Is there any course-related matter you would like to discuss?

THINKING OF ACCESSIBILITY

ACCESSIBLE TEACHING IN THE TIME OF COVID-19

Aimi Hamraie-

"As universities declare class cancelations and mandate a shift to online teaching, instructors have the opportunity to design online course materials to be as accessible as possible from the beginning. This will also ensure that your course materials are accessible moving forward. All of the below suggestions come from disability culture and community. Disabled people have been using online spaces to teach, organize, and disseminate knowledge since the internet was invented. Disabled people are leading survival praxis in apocalyptic times. Please recognize that the very types of remote access that universities now mandate for classrooms and conferences have been denied to disabled people. Please also recognize that disabled people have long engaged in refining methods for remote access to protests, classrooms, doctor’s offices, public meetings, and other events. Mention this in your classes so that students know they are benefitting from crip technology and praxis. Commit to accessible teaching because it is crip technoscience and disabled ingenuity that has made remote participation possible. https://

STANDARDS & SLO’s aka OBJECTIVES
As you get started with all this, also relook at your standards, and SLO’s. Each Department might have different standards or learning objects. Relook at them and see how you can re-adapt your lessons to fulfill your objectives.

TECH PLATFORMS
You also need to ask your students about the platforms you will be using and what platforms are accessible to them.

Most colleges use the following 4 platforms:
Blackboard
Canvas (https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=DEwW5a93J8&feature=youtu.be&fbclid=IwAR0bzF1F18TIHOS7YkJ8w9SUN--Dyo37caxttoBigFl8AQvV-cN8d18)
https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=pfabTvkka0l&fbclid=IwAR3WR5jkrkzV7mgML7_S2pGTTvqggW32x2ygsk42ZD5WSgqcsSgeQdQ
BrightSpace
Course Site

Ask the students if they are familiar with each of these programs and how much they use them. Especially, if you have not used these programs before.

Move everything to these programs ASAP. Spend some time exploring them. They are pretty easy to learn, and maily you need to play with them. Everything from grades, to chats, to reviewing documents is available. Ask your IT specialist to help you. Best option is to call them, they are probably at school even if you are not.

They are also probably swamped, but they are there to help you. My university has a specialist for each of our colleges. You can also contact your library, as most librarians are trained in these programs.

Take a look at this resource that was created for online business courses, on how to teach remotely. It looks at online teaching across various universities. Each link shows you what each university is offering. A lot of the links are being updated daily, given the urgency.
https://docs.google.com/spreadsheets/d/1VT9boNYPvEsgHBoDKiwLWASWP58sGV7A3oJyEUG3k/htmlview?si=true#gid=1552188977

As mentioned, most of these online platforms have group chats and group options. Universities have paid $$$ to utilize them.

Here are some very useful group chats that everyone is talking about:
Zoom
https://zoom.us/
https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=VgDaYsBqDU&feature=youtu.be&fbclid=IwAR0ZRSeyWuIoAtmxS-TP8ujK92Myp6e6ig2O9nt4Nd2J2HwhAMx0yrq4JE

Ten Zoom Tech Tips
https://docs.google.com/presentation/d/1Uxf2z_n9a0aXV8XBozqK_XPOPwM0f1LOKogGhG7kbF/c/mobilepresent?slide=id.p

I have personally used Zoom, and it is wonderful. It can host over 100 people, and you have the authority to mute various users. You can also create chats, groups and more. It can be used on the phone or on a computer or tablet. Record everything you do and transfer it to video.

Echo360
https://echo360.com/

Google Hangouts
https://support.google.com/meet/answer/9760270?hl=en

For your own protection, make sure you are using programs that are being supported by the university. You want to make sure you keep a record of everything, because teaching online is not the same as in person, and people can not read tone or might derive meaning from certain facial expressions.

Other technical tools that are very useful:

- Youtube (Videos that can go live; and have interaction with its followers; You can make them private for classes. You can also create a Youtube for your class to access and use)
- FlipGrid (Interactive Discussion Boards with Short Videos) (A decent “how to” video: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=vJOoloQ7k5Q)
- VoiceThread (Video interactivity for Discussion Boards, etc.)
- Hypothes.is (Annotate the web, Hold Live Discussions, Read Socially)
- Panopto (Lecture recording, Livestreaming Software, Quizzing Software)
Synchronously VRS Asynchronous Online Teaching

Talking about accessibility- in creating this document, I have come across various educators & artists who are blind. They shared with me that any images on a google doc need to be described or transcribed, otherwise their software can not read it. All it says is image. Thus below each image I will be describing what it says.

Please keep this in mind if you are creating any documents.

This is a chart that describes the difference between Synchronous and Asynchronous Online teaching. One side of the chart describes Synchronous Face to Face meetings that meet once a week or twice for a whole lesson. Best Platforms are Zoom, Google Hangouts/Meet, Skype and Microsoft Teams. This type of teaching creates/fosters connection; it is easy to use to introduce & explain tasks, promote social integration and connection with everyone or small groups. You can also use it to help clarifying, by answering direct questions, misconceptions and lastly, provide immediate emotional support. The other side of the chart provides Asynchronous online collaboration. You can also use this once or twice a week, they can comment on things, and choose peers to work together. This is great for collaboration, projects that can last 2-3 weeks and peer/groups feedback. Best Platforms are Moodle, Google Classroom or Docs, Voicethred, and Bloggins platforms like wix, wordpress, etc. It can also work for Critical Thinking, where you post a prompt, and remotely people can reply, and others can reply but it is not done in real time. It can create visual thinking routines, guiding and inquiry questions.

This chart is a list of Core Teaching apps available on most smartphones. It is a great start to discover what our students have available to them on their phones. Listed are search engines, classroom management apps, storage engines, digital scrapbook, communication apps, and multimodal literacy apps; with subcategories in video, multimedia, images & image/text manipulation.

What are ONLINE ACTING CLASSES?
Online Acting classes have been happening for years. Many charge a lot of money for them. If professionals have been doing this for years, we can also jump in and probably do it even better.

It is very important not to be afraid and to be willing to rethink how to teach your courses. Unfortunately, we do not have the freedom to say, I cannot teach this course anymore. We have to, and we have to find ways to make it work. Hopefully you students will not like it either. Remember we are all in it together.

THINGS TO THINK OF AS YOU TRANSITION TO ONLINE THEATRE TEACHING
It is important to note that in order to take these courses students need internet skills. There is a learning curb to all these courses, but hopefully you can jump in and learn with the students. If you don’t like teaching online, there is a high probability, you students will not like it either. Remember we are all in it together.

Teaching Drama in these times but you get to observe the teacher online. These classes can be free (which is rare, unless you find something on YouTube), but usually come at a single-payment price...There are only a handful of truly good quality online acting lessons that are worth looking into. Most will not provide you with any certification or degrees. (BUT WE ARE)

Here are the most popular ones if you want to see what they are doing: Udemy courses. There's more than one acting related class on Udemy. If you search, you'll find them. Unfortunately, all of that is basically theory from unknown people. Not only are they not acting coaches or experienced names, I have doubts they even have any credits. I would discount this one right away.

Acting Studios. This is a step in the right direction. I haven't taken their paid classes, but I've had access to some free stuff to look around. Jason Alexander is their flagship acting coach, and his class, as well as a few others I was able to access on the site, are worth taking a look at. You can also get a 2-hour trial on the site. MasterClass. These guys are at the forefront of online teaching at the moment. They were able to bring the biggest names from many different parts of the industry — anything from dancing and singing to filmmaking, acting and writing. I've tried several courses on MasterClass myself, and was quite impressed with the quality of teaching. Preply Online

YouTube https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=RiX-EJĄ8n4w MTV filmed the Broadway production of Legally Blonde: The Musical. It has some commercial breaks but it is free! Legally Blonde: The Musical tells the story of Delta Nu Sorority Sister Elle Woods, and her amazing trip in pursuit of sexy man Warner Huntington III. Along the way she meets friends Emmett, Paulette, and all her Delta Nus see her through.

Netflix: American Son: This was a play on Broadway starring Kerry Washington, Steven Pasquale, Jeremy Jordan and was directed by Kenny Leon. In a Florida police station, an estranged interacial couple awaits news of their missing son. According to sources who worked on the play, it is very close to the original B’way production.

Amazon Prime: Pass Over: Written by former BMCC Professor Antoinette Nwanda, this play was done at Steppenwolf Theatre in Chicago. Spike Lee filmed this powerful production and it incorporates the effect on the audience. Moses and Kitc stand around on the corner—talking shit, passing the time and hoping that maybe today will be different. As they dream of their promised land, a stranger wanders into their space with his own agenda and derails their plans. Emotional and lyrical, Pass Over crafts everyday profanities into poetic and humorous riffs, exposing the unquestionable human spirit of young men stuck in a cycle just looking for a way out.

PERFORMANCE FESTIVALS ONLINE

The Social Distancing Festival
Is an online artist’s community made to celebrate and showcase the work of the many artists around the world who have been affected by the need for social distancing that has come about due to the spread of Coronavirus (COVID-19).
At this point, submissions can be a lot of different things. Photos or videos stage welcome, and NO you don’t have to be from Toronto! PLEASE include with your submission some information about how this work has been impacted by the need for social distancing, as well as when/where this work had been slated for presentation.
https://www.social distancingfestival.com/submit

The Ghost Lighting Initiative
The Ghost Light Initiative, a collaborative project whose motto is to “leave a light on”. The mission of the initiative is to help art persevere through these trying times. Students and artists can submit their work to the Initiative’s web page as a replacement for live performance or presentation. The students who lost opportunities due to the crisis would now have an outlet to channel their creative energies to something new and powerful. Patrons of the art would have a safe space to experience art without risking their health and safety. And most importantly, art can keep shining its light and continue providing hope in these troubling times. Like a Ghost Light, we aim to metaphorically keep the stage lit while the theatre is dark and empty.

TEACHING ASSIGNMENTS AND IDEAS

GENERAL DISCUSSION IDEAS & PROMPTS
Ideas by Professor Jonathan Jones

Using Discussion Board, Forum, or other function (platform specific), create unique threads for each class session or class reading and present prompts that you might otherwise have given for in-class discussion. Here, have each student respond to the prompt - and then follow up by asking each student to respond to at least one other student.

Example: I often ask students to think about general prompts for all class readings as we go through the semester in preparation for in-class discussion. For our online classes, their assignment is to post two short responses to the week's readings (100-250 words) on the class discussion board. The first response will be an initial post responding directly to the prompts and the second will be a response to someone else’s post.

Prompts:
1. What new idea did you discover as you read the chapter?
2. How did this information sit with your prior understanding of drama education?
3. What questions do you have as a result of reading the chapter?

INSTAGRAM CHALLENGE
Posted by Eunice S. Ferreira, Skidmore College
* One of my guiding principles is to limit required exercises and provide them with optional exercises since their circumstances widely vary. I am adding this optional exercise to the list.

As I was falling down the rabbit hole of social media, I came across this museum challenge that can be easily adapted for a fun assignment for Directing, Theater History, Dramaturgy and all areas of design. Students recreate/reimagine a famous piece of art and tag it with #tussenkunstenaarquarantaine. The subject can also be adapted to only draw from theater material such as a painting of commedia dell’arte performers or terracotta statuette of an actor.

Exquisite Corps (42 choreographers, 1 dance)
My favorite and most inspiring as it can be recreated with students upload a video to whichever platform they best prefer, an embodied response to that prompt. For example, you can start by sending them a prompt for-
How do you feel about student cancellations, and have them create a 30 second to 1 min movement video about that. It can actually be a lot of fun, and a great way to start these online classes.

ONLINE VOCAL PEDAGOGY

Johns Hopkins Peabody Conservatory

Assignments Ideas for Online Vocal Pedagogy:
Similar to movement activities; vocal activities can also be done online. Actually students can all speak at once, especially if you use google hangouts or zoom-

-WARM UP/ Follow the Leader
Have students create a vocal warm up. With Zoom everyone can physically see each other and hear one another. They can easily follow the leader and as the professor, you can hear each one. You can also ask them to stop and ask each students to go one by one.

-TIKTOK
Students are LOVing this app. You can brainstorm some vocal as well as physical movements with it.

-ACAPELLA APP or PicPlay Post
Students are LOVing this app. You can brainstorm some vocal as well as physical movements with it.

-WARM UP/ Follow the Leader
Have students create a warm up. With Zoom everyone can physically see each other and follow the leader. You can also create a Youtube channel where each student creates a video of a warm up or a sequence of warm ups.

-IMITATION

On Zoom, you can literally pass an exercise and each student can mimic it. It will feel funny at first but everyone can jump in on it. You might want to create an order first, maybe alphabetically, and send it to the students, so they know.

-MOVEMENT PIECE
Ask students to either perform a piece via Zoom or create a youtube video where they post it and you can add feedback via the comments.

-ACAPELLA APP or PicPlay Post
Students are LOVing this app. You can brainstorm some vocal as well as physical movements with it.

-CREATING VOCAL Exercises
Students can record themselves doing exercises and post them online. They can be posted on various platforms, and made private. Each student can record themselves and then have the other comment.
Using this As A Time To Hone Self-Tape Skills

Teaching Drama in these times

• Self Tapes

Use this As A Time To Hone Self-Tape Skills

Developed by Professor Kaja Dunn
While the primary focus of many acting classes is on theatre and scene work, this presents an optimal time to work on self-tape skills for both Theatre and Film auditions. Help students master things like, lighting, sound, what needs to be adjusted when filming a monologue rather than performing one onstage? Here are a few articles:

- One Person Show skills
Developed by Professor Kaja Dunn
In addition working on multi-character one person show scripts (No Child, Freak) and letting classmates provide feedback is another way to teach performance in the event of needing to go online.
Look at creating clean shifts in characters, switching between characters and how you make big choices without falling into stereotypes.

- Character Work
Create handout for students on to-do’s for characters and have discussions on:
What Does Your Character Want to Do?
What STOPS Your Character?
What are their emotional, psychological factors?
You can poll the class live asking these questions and using https://www.polleverywhere.com/

- Famous Scenes
-Sent via Joel King
Have the professor read a line from a famous scene. Then have the students record themselves responding to the line. They might know the next line or not, but it is partially an improv exercise as well as an actor’s response.
This is great activity to do with VoiceThread, where you can upload slides with the line, have them record responses and then go to the next slide that tells them the play or movie is from. It can be a lot of fun.

- Table Work: Developed by Professor Chris Barry
This is a great time to have students focus on detailed text analysis and vocal work at the same time. Here is a process that I will be using to implement detailed text work before we go to working on camera audition work. The goal is to stress process over product in this method.
7-Step Table working process
• Reading the Play/Scene/Monologue for pleasure
• Stress that the students can read the play for enjoyment, not thinking about their specific role, but reading it to enjoy the story and begin to create an understanding of what will be performed. When they decide to read the monologue or scene to you digitally, please stress that performance is not the goal at this moment. This is the time to hear the Monologue in a clear voice, not too layered with opinion.

- Cold reading
With apps and platforms like Zoom; you can actually conduct various lessons around cold readings.
Whichever platform you use, you can start by hearing your students read line out loud to a scene. Each student can take turns, at reading a new script/scene/monologue. Everyone can hear them. You can also make one-on-one apt and hear each student do their own 1st reading. By using Zoom, you can place the students in groups, and have other students correct each other, or give cue lines and go back over any weak areas. These partners could be the other scene partner or they can be a guide, depending if it is a scene or monologue. You can schedule the following session to see how they have practice or not. You can assign different monologues or scenes, but it would be great as a first cold reading.

- Memorization
There are several apps which can help with learning lines. This is a perfect time to explore them with our students.]

With Line Learner you record all the lines including those of other characters and then listen to them leaving silent pauses to speak your own lines.
With Rehearsal Pro you can upload a script and watch it scrolling by as you record your lines to listen to. Even if they don’t use an app they can make a recording of the scene/monologue with a tape-recorder or smartphone. Listen to it at any time.
Remind the students to leave gaps in the recording to speak your own lines, move around while they are saying their lines.
Then ask students to learn the cue lines that lead in to each of their lines.
You can have a student on Zoom/group chat to quiz the student with other lines.
Being prompt with your lines will give you and your fellow actors more confidence.
lastly, you can make students create a recording of the script/scene/monologue as a final performance.

- Creating a PODCAST
For the end of the semester project, students can create their own podcasts. It can be very fun and empowering.
Actually, Prof. Brian Herrara has suggested he will be activating his podcast STINKYLULU SAYS for his lectures. Podcasts create easy accessible ways for students to hear the work.

Teaching Drama in these Times

- Reading the Play/Scene/Monologue for Meaning
  During this step the instructor and student can begin to discuss themes and meaning of the play. Naturally the discussion will potentially travel to the monologue or scene the students are working on. This is a great point to begin to address given circumstances, social situations and how the text is informing what is going on in the specific moment.
- Reading for Changes in Thoughts/Ideas/ Moments/Beats
  Take the time to break down where the student can begin to carve out where they believe that new thoughts and ideas begin and end. This is a moment where they are stressed to take ownership based upon their analysis of the text.
- When the students are carving out thoughts and ideas this is a moment to stress the use of operative words.
- Using 2 words that frame what they want from each thought can aid in using language to achieve their goals.
- It is useful to stress to the students to punch the thoughts and not words.
- Punching words is a natural step because students will want to show you that they can stress the words. I recommend that it is reminded that the role that they are creating is theirs and punching words for the instructor is not the focus, their ownership of the language is the goal.
- This process can take a while and encouraging multiple perspectives and attempts is recommended. Along with this, stressing that the students justify their choices based upon textual examples, not feelings.
- Attacking the Text
  In this stage, encourage the students to make large vocal choices using their full voices to explore how moments can be as full as possible. This process helps students avoid underacting a role for the sake of being natural.
- Be sure to encourage students to stay as full and powerful as possible, using healthy vocal techniques. There will be obvious moments that clearly do not require this size, please recommend that the students still engage through the end of the scene/monologue.
- Finessing the text
  This reading of the text will be finding the softer moments to counter the moments that were discovered while attacking the text. This is a moment to work and practice dynamics in the scene. Many times in this step of the process the natural transitions and energetic shifts in the scene are discovered
- Removing the Air
  In this step of the process, much of the analytical and performance work has been investigated. This is a moment to push past the natural inclination to add pauses and moments that may not be written in the language. This helps the students to continue to act on the line and not create moments that may not be necessary.
- In this step of the process, please stress that tempo is not the goal, the removal of the unnecessary air between the lines is. This is hard for many actors because the faster they pick up their cues, the faster they begin to speak.
  - The Radio Play
    This is the final step of the process and the scene/monologue/play can be heard with the majority of the textual and vocal choices being solidified. This step should sound like the play, just without movement.

Upon completing the table working process, the students should have a clear understanding of the world that they have created. I hope this has been useful in helping the students own their work and choices.

SCENE WORK
- Check above under Acting

Resource- Breaking Character

Assignments for Scene Work:
Based on Lessons by Anna Porter
- Show & Tell
  Part 1- Before students work on their scenes, you can create a handout that makes them find and fill the gaps of the story; where they can add additional scenarios about these characters & backgrounds. Part 2- Find a photograph of the scenes they are exploring, and have the students fill in the gaps. Where in the scene is that photograph from? What clues and context can be used? How could they add to this image, based on the scene they know.
- Interview/How Seat
  Have the students pick a character from their scene, and have the rest of the class interview that character on Zoom.
- Staging/Story Board
  Based on Lessons by Anna Porter
  - Thou Shalt of Staging and Performance
    Stu dent engage in a conversation about staging dos and don’t. You can have them draw diagrams or even use https://floorplanner.com/ to create how the set will be staged. They can also discuss and explore the rules of staging and performance and why they are important.
    Finally, they write/create maybe even record a Bad Idea/ Good Idea skit for the class, to demonstrate their understanding of the concept.
    Scene Tactic Exploration
  Students can develop exercises to explore how conflict affects their active tactics. Students apply conflict to a scene for performance.

-Pair Up

Online

Using Zoom, you can pair up students and have them review what they have studied in their unit as well as how to give and use constructive feedback. Then, they can pair up with another group, and discuss another scene and their plans/-actions/tactics with each other. You can create a worksheet to guide them and their discussion. This handout can have a template to track a duo scene, including play details, character details, objectives, obstacles, tactics, and more.

-Dialogue

Prompts

Using Zoom, have students create prompt dialogues for a chat, that includes characters, locations, wants and a first line for each prompt. Then, have students randomly pick the prompts and start the conversations online.

Assignments for Commedia courses:

- Compare and Contrast

Students watch the Comedia video respond to a Commedia Dell’Arte Handout. They will then reflect on what it would be like to have been a Commedia actor, the similarities and differences between Commedia and modern acting, and which type of acting they would prefer.

- Lazzi

Students learn about different commedia lazzi and create their own.

- Stock Character Walks

Part 1 - Students explore Commedia stock characters: the masters, the servants and the lovers and write analysis on each character. They can also look at video of these characters and learn the multiple walks and critique them. Part 2 - Students can then record character walks and post them on their respective platforms. They can be critiqued, and commented on. They can also do these walks live on Zoom and everyone can talk about them.

Part 3 - Students can then create a Commedia mask to go with their favorite character and present it online plus a paper attached with research about it. Part 4 - Students could create a TikTok faceoff with Commedia characters.

DIRECTING
For directing, there are multiple classes that can focus on various things. You can have Zoom conversations that focus on staging and rules. They can create floor plans for them. They can also help further develop understanding of stage areas, directions on stage and notations on labeling a stage map as well as basic script notation. They can also create effective stage pictures, by developing distinct pictures for the beginning, middle, and end of their scenes via storyboards.

https://www.storyboardthat.com/
https://theplot.io/
https://www.canva.com/create/storyboards/

There can also be a series of lessons that revolve around background work. Students can create character backgrounds and relationships/given circumstances as well. You can create handouts for this or have discussions on Zoom. You can even assign student to create a social media presence for the characters they are portraying/directing. They can create FB/IG, etc.

They can also create body & voice objectives for their characters. This can be handouts created with google forms or other platforms. Then they can create multiple videos for each character. Think- A Gentleman’s Guide to Murder & Love

  - Spatial Observation
    Sometime during the next week, find 10-20 minutes to sit and observe people in their natural environment. Select a place where people tend to stay for a period of time: the park, a coffee shop, etc. Take notes on how people exist in the space. How do they enter it? How do they claim it? How do they settle in it? What is their body language like in relation to each other? How does that language shift? What can you tell about these people by the way they are interacting, not what they’re saying? In fact, if you can’t hear them; all the better. (12pt font/ Double Space; Page number up to you…)

- TDF Theatre Dictionary/Definitions (developed by Liane Tomasetti Bryne)
  Have students create videos of Theatre Definitions, similar to the ones provided by TDF Example-

MORE DIRECTING IDEAS/Assignments- From David Ian Lee
This shift may necessitate a change in your syllabus and calendar. Meaning: presentation of your students' directing scenes -- as originally conceived -- might have to be rescheduled. I agree with Daphnie that invested work in students' directors' books is a great course of action -- continued analysis, research, preparatory work, etc. Other options:

- Have your students reimagine how to stage their work for new media. Pipeline is discussing how we can stage "Zoom Plays" in the next few weeks: not a film, not a staged reading, but a presentation of a text where the characters communicate via Zoom. It's an interesting challenge, and it forces directors to become very specific about language, intention, and structure.

- Have your students study existing scenes on video (from filmed plays or from tv/film) and break them apart for beats, intentions, subtext, etc. Get specific and diverse with the language, because the more you can mine the more you can later utilize in your own work.
- Similarly, have students study photography, paintings, or sculpture to examine how body position, non-verbal cues, line, structure of the space, etc. communicate meaning and narrative.

- This is also a great time to write or revisit personal mission statements -- and to confirm that even what we do during this strange period of time is in service of the mission. To that end, I always show Simon Sinek's TedTalk about "the golden circles" and ask students to consider their "why" -- both for themselves, and for the piece of work they are creating. This I stole in part from the brilliant Brian Foley, but he owns that he stole it first from Sinek, so I have no qualms.

GIVING THEM OPTIONS
Posted by Eunice S. Ferreira, Skidmore College

I have posted a list of optional exercises for my directing students. The course is required in the major. I have mostly actors, a couple of aspiring directors and a stage manager. Here are a few of the optional exercises that can be recorded or presented live on Zoom.

Perform a one minute-one person moment from your scene (actors will love this one!)

- Select a character from the scene.
- The moment may be literal (something that happens or could happen in that scene) or metaphorical (a poetic representation) of the character.
- You may incorporate vocalizations (laugh/cry/gasp/sigh/hum) but do not use text (so as to avoid performing a monologue).
- You may incorporate other sounds (external sounds of the play's physical or metaphorical world, sounds that are real or imagined by the character, sounds that reflect inner life of the character)
- You may incorporate music but avoid making a music video.
- Perform this for your own exploration and/or record it to share with the class on Zoom or as an uploaded recording to Blackboard.

Create a conceptual sound design

- What kinds of music and/or sounds might inhabit the world of the play?
- What kinds of music and/or sounds express the world of the play?

Create a playlist

- Choose at least 2 characters from the play and create a playlist for them.
- Save the playlist on Spotify so that your peers and I can check them out.
- Don’t worry if the time setting of your play does not align with the music unless the music of the play's setting is essential to your conceptualization of the play.
- Consider how character playlists could be incorporated into your rehearsal process or as an exercise you might suggest to the actors.

Metaphors and Composition

"Through metaphor we see the truth about our condition" Anne Bogart, A Director Prepares

'I don't want realism, I want magic.' (Blanche, scene nine, A Streetcar Named Desire)

- Identify a moment of literal action in your scene. Create a tableau to represent that moment. You may imagine that tableau in your mind, sketch it, find an image to represent it or stage the tableau (with volunteer family members).
- Identify a metaphor that represents your scene. You may choose a metaphor to represent a specific moment or one that represents the heart of the scene or play. Represent the metaphor in any way you choose - a tableau, an image, a movement phrase, sound or anything else.
- As you imagine metaphors, consider the spine of the play and your directorial point of view.

DEVISED THEATRE
From Professor Coya Paz

This is the easy one? In ensemble/devising process, we already practice designing/adapting our processes to meet people where they are. I think the key to devising together online is to ask what you want students to learn (this is probably a good idea for all of our teaching) and adapt your usual exercises to fit these goals. In our book, Chloe Johnston and I observe that many ensemble-practioners use exercises that fit into three main categories: Check-Ins, Ensemble Building, and Make Small Things. These are separate than the work of putting together a show, of course, but helpful in the introductory process.

Check-Ins: if you are doing an asynchronous class, your check-ins may be less about convening the group than keeping up with how everyone is feeling. Or they may become very quick ways of gathering bits of information, questions, ideas. I suggest keeping one document with check-in answers, or one discussion thread, so that you are encouraging them to respond to each other.

Ensemble-Building: Activities that are about building a sense of community will happen online - think about how close many of us feel to people we’ve never met IRL but “know” from the socials. Some ideas (please add your own):

- Written story circles
- Designing an online game or role play together
- Small group discussions and interviews with a goal of bringing back some piece of information

Make Small Things/(aka Go Away and Make Something): In general, we spend a lot of time in devising/co-created processes making a lot of material we may never use, and why should online be any different. Students can still:

- Conduct interviews and write performance pieces/generate monologues
- Create variations on each others’ work. Have students make one-minute videos, then have them each pick 3-4 to build upon or recreate.
- Create 2-3 person pieces via Zoom/Hang/etc
- Self-record movement pieces/spoken pieces/etc

DRAMATIC ACTIVITIES IN SCHOOLS

From Professor Sara Simons:

Since much fieldwork will be canceled and many districts are closed for prolonged periods of time, have your educational theatre students create parent resource guides for creative drama with their children. Provide story drama lessons and descriptions of activities that parents can use to keep children creatively engaged.

Leverage popular social media platforms and create interactive instructional videos on creative play that can be used by teachers or parents.

Have students create TikTok or other “viral” videos with messaging about handwashing, etc.

Use Ed Tech platforms like Flip Grid for assignments as a way to get students comfortable with lots of different platforms of educational technology that they can then use as teachers. Give an assignment via the platforms and then ask the preservice teachers to create their own assignments that they could use with students.

Record or livestream drama classes in action.

Watching TV (or Film) from Lily Bartenstein

Learning Objectives: Identify and Articulate Design Ideas
Activity: Students choose an episode of TV or Film & take screenshots illustrating the areas of design, which are then compiled into a google doc or slides presentation.

Overall Design Assignment/Project from Professor Lily Bartenstein
Design Documentation Scavenger Hunt
I use this strategy with F2F stagecraft and drafting courses, but it translates well online.

Light Plot Scavenger Hunt:
Provide 3-4 light plots by different designers. Challenge students to find information by reading the plot - e.g. What color is instrument 7 on the first electric? Which fixtures (identified by position and unit number) have purpose assigned as area 1? Which fixtures (identified by position and unit number) have drop in iris units? etc.

Scenic Design Scavenger Hunt:
Provide 1-2 complete scenic drafting packages. Challenge students to find information in the plates - e.g. According to the groundplan, on which plate can you find elevations for Wall A? How tall are the stairs leading up to the main platform? etc. In computer drafting classes I also ask them to locate information like which layer or class a certain scenic element might be found on.

Props Sourcing Assignment
Give students specifications for a prop needed for a show - e.g. the designer is looking for a wooden table approximately 2’ x 5’ that can be used as a desk in one scene and a dining table in the next
Have students source 4 options for the show using Craigslist, FB marketplace, Amazon, in-person thrift stores, etc.
Each student then compiles an email to the instructor with the following details for each option:
Option #, source, price

Assignments for Make Up Design

-MAKE UP TUTORIALS

A lot of students LOVE makeup videos. You can actually hold a class via zoom where they do make up in their bathrooms or make up spaces. They can also do powerpoints with step by step photographs of their makeup designs. They can place these on voicethread and they can talk over the images. Another great idea would be to have them create a youtube channel. It can be private. You can also create a channel for them, and they can all access it. They can also post videos on thier college platforms (blackboard, canvas, brightspace) if they do not feel comfortable going on youtube. But most of those platforms are not very good for posting videos. But offering both options is important.

SET DESIGN

Time Travel Research Assignment
Have students travel to various museums online, and pick on room or one era. Have them create a research paper based on that time period & what they saw discovered at the museum.

For Scenic Design provided by Lian Rothschild Compile 3 screenshots that illustrate the following:
- The color palette of the show as a whole
- How the production design (scenic design or location) show the time and place the the scene is set. A personal space belonging to a character - maybe it's their bedroom, office, kitchen etc. What do the objects in the space tell us about that character?

For Lighting Design provided by Lian Rothschild
Choose a scene with a clear lighting idea, and answer the following questions:
- What happens in the scene?
- What is the mood of the scene?
- How do the qualities of the light relate to the mood? What does it tell you about when (time of day) or where (inside, outside, weather) the scene takes place? How does the lighting help tell the story?

*In class I pull one image from each student's project and throw it up on the projector and ask the class to guess what the time/place/mood of the scene is before having the student tell us what was really going on.

ADVICE TO REMEMBER
Excellent Advice from Daniel Ayres:
Are you transitioning from traditional learning to online learning? Here’s a few tips I came up with, primarily aimed at higher education.

For those of you who don’t know me, I have a MS. Occupational Safety Management. BS Tech Theater, and am 3 courses away from an MA in Theater.

Converting an in-person course to an online course is pretty easy to do. It takes some time to do it right, but it’s not complicated. There are a couple of critical areas of engagement you’ll need to create since you won’t have the in-class opportunities. Keeping your LMS organized from the get-go is also crucial, here are a few tips I’ve picked up which work well for college level. For this article, I’m going to assume that you’re organization already has an LMS, and you’ve only minimally used it for your in-person courses. Still, you do not need to establish credentials, etc.

If your organization doesn’t already have a web conference platform, Zoom is probably the best for you to try. Other popular platforms include Microsoft Teams, Cisco WebEx, Citrix GoToMeeting, and there are others. They all work slightly differently, but they all allow you to have a presenter who can host content, and they allow users to present a presentation, see webcam video, and listen to the audio. Most services charge a per-minute fee for phone calls, advise your students to either use computer audio, or use the “Call my phone” feature to minimize costs for your organization. Avoid services that limit your video from students or are more for socializing rather than distance learning, an example being Facebook messenger.

Every student and instructor needs to have a webcam. For students, a built-in camera is probably acceptable. As an instructor, you should have a camera positioned at the top, center, of your primary monitor. The Logitech c525 is the one I use. It’s $30, effective and not very fancy but the quality is good over a web conference.

A lamp positioned behind your monitor works well to light your face. A ring light is a good investment for you as an instructor but not necessary for students. Advise your students of good lighting practices.

I also recommend a headset with a headphone and microphone. I like wireless Bluetooth and use a Plantronics Voyager, but the wired ones are just fine and much less expensive. If you want to record any lectures, any high-quality microphone for podcasting works. Google “Podcasting microphones,” and you’ll get many viable recommendations.

When you first announce that everyone must be on video, You’ll get objections; Nobody likes to be on camera at first. Explain it’s a requirement to try and capture the collaboration you’re not getting anymore.

For the class itself, try to be visible as much as you can but share your presentation when you need to. Most services will allow your students to identify whether they want to emphasize the instructor’s camera or the instructor’s presentation, but the student should see both. When your student asks a question, they should be on video. Encourage them to have a headset as well, but they need to see and be seen so push for a webcam.

That covers web calls; for your standard lectures without interactive, it’s ok to record them in advance. If you do that, use Camtasia to do some light editing. This is great for cutting to your slides, cutting back, and light annotations. Use a service such as Otter.ai or SermonScribe to provide a transcript if you present this way as the visual will give an additional type of engagement for some learners.

Student engagement is essential. In addition to any lectures and Q&A, you’ll want to create opportunities for students to collaborate. One way is through a discussion board in your LMS. You’ll need to focus on how you set it up to be effective, though. I’ve found setting a parent tab for each week to be the best. A week is one semester week. It starts at 12:01 AM Friday, contains two weekends, and ends at 11:59 PM on Monday. This provides a slight overlap. Any items due in a given week are due at 11:59 Monday.

Set up a weekly parent tab for each of the remaining weeks. Create a child tab each week for each:
Discussion, Learning Materials, Activities, and Assessments. Delete any which aren’t used.

The discussion Tab
Post a topic in your discussion forum. This is typically 2-3 questions of approximately 1-2 sentences each. Ask that each student contributes to the discussion by answering the questions, each with a one-paragraph response. Each response should be around 250 words, which makes it easy to grade as you assign your points as a percentage of 250 words. Ask the students to provide 2-4 sentences of comments to the responses of at least two other students.

The Learning Materials Tab
Share pertinent content. Try to share 2-4 recent journal articles and YouTube videos each week as well. If you recorded any lectures, post them here. This is also where you can post the Link/meeting code for your web conference. I also encourage sharing any materials from the publisher here, including PowerPoint presentations.

Activities Tab
Post any assignments here, which the student will start and compete during the week. This should include the submission portal.

Note: Create a parent tab for any semester projects and projects which span more than one week.

Assessment Tab
Post a weekly quiz here. The Quiz should be approximately 20 questions. Using any publisher question banks is fine.

Note: For semester exams, give them a parent tab or put them here. Either works well. Exams. Exams are tricky. Your textbook publisher will give you a database of questions, those are fine for about 80% of the questions but I would encourage 3-hour open-book exams. Allow students to work with friends but require them to submit exams individually. Don’t share the answers or completed exams until after they have all been collected.

That should get you up and running; I’m guessing I probably created a few questions along the way. Just ask I’m happy to answer.

Sharing from Prof. Devon G. Peñas FB
Pedagogy in the time of an epidemic: This is from Amy Young @ Pacific Lutheran

1. Be kind to yourself and your students. Everyone is stressed, even if they’re playing cool. That includes faculty. And that’s OK.

2. Let’s acknowledge that the quality of education will not be as good in alternative formats as it is in the pedagogical model we’ve actually planned for. That’s OK as well—we’re just trying to survive.

3. Do not read on best practices for distance learning. That’s not the situation we’re in. We’re in triage. Distance learning, when planned, can be really excellent. That’s not what this is. Do what you absolutely have to and ditch what you can. Thinking you can manage best practices in a day or a week will lead to feeling like you’ve failed.

4. You will not recreate your classroom, and you cannot hold yourself to that standard. Moving a class to a distance learning model in a day’s time excludes the possibility of excellence. Give yourself a break.

5. Prioritize: what do students really need to know for the next few weeks? This is really difficult, and, once again, it means that the quality of teaching and learning will suffer. But these are not normal circumstances.

6. Stay in contact with students, and stay transparent. Talk to them about why you’re prioritizing certain things or asking them to read or do certain things. Most of us do that in our face-to-face teaching anyway, and it improves student buy-in because they know content and delivery are purposeful.

7. Many universities have a considerable number of pedagogical experts on academic technology that we have only been dimly aware of until yesterday. Be kind to these colleagues. They are suddenly very slammed.

8. If you’re making videos, student viewership drops off precipitously at five minutes. Make them capsule videos if you make them. And consider uploading to YouTube because it transcribes for you. Do not assume your audio is good enough or that students can understand without transcription. This is like using a microphone at meetings—it doesn’t matter if you don’t need it; someone else does and they don’t want to ask. At the same time, of course, think about intellectual property and what you’re willing to release to a wide audience.

9. Make assignments lower or no stakes if you’re using a new platform. Get students used to just using the platform. Then you can do something higher stakes. Do not ask students to do a high stakes exam or assignment on a new platform.

10. Be particularly kind to your graduating seniors. They’re already panicking, and this isn’t going to help. If you teach a class where they need to have completed something for certification, to apply to grad school, or whatever, figure out plan B. But talk to them. Radio silence, even if you’re working, is not okay.
